On Oct. 2nd 01, Hedy Fry MP, in her own defence, responding to criticisms of her failure to denounce the rantings of Prof. Thobani, whose meeting she attended, stated in Parliament, words to the effect that it wasn't her speech and she thought that in this country we can say what we want.

Come again! Canadians have the right to say what they want? This statement seems to imply that we have the right to free speech in this country. Does this right apply to everyone? Or, does it only apply to those Hedy Fry and her brain fried colleagues think should be recognized by them to have that right?

If everyone has the right to free speech, the question must be asked, "Why was Ernst Zundel prosecuted and convicted, not for anything he said, but simply for publishing what someone else said?" We must also ask why the late and very much lamented Doug Collins, amongst many others, was so persecuted, prosecuted and vilified for what he had to say.

We can only conclude, despite Hedy Fry's assertions, that everyone does not have the right to free speech. If such is the case, we must ask our legislators for clarification. We require, so that we do not inadvertently transgress, some kind of guide or list of who may say what they want and about whom and what they may say it. Big Brother! Please guide and instruct us, in our ignorance and folly, so that we do not sin.
